to start for Suzanne. The Duke of Ragusa is at Cham-paubert. General Sacken is at Montmirail with 15,000 men. I will have him attacked to-morrow.

10th, Sezanne:

I am just getting into the saddle to move on Champau-bert. I am rather delayed by the roads; they are awful; we have six feet of mud.

Champaubert, 10 P. M. .•

I attacked the enemy at Champaubert. They had twelve regiments and jforty guns. The general-in-chief, Olsouvief, was captured, with all his generals, officers, guns, wagons, and baggage. We have counted so far 6000 prisoners, 40 guns, 200 wagons. The rest were driven into a pond, or killed on the field of battle. This corps is absolutely destroyed.

We are marching on Montmirail, which we should reach at ten o'clock to-night. I have the strongest hopes that Sacken is lost; and if luck is with us, as it has been to-day, the whole look of things will change in the twinkling of an eye, because Sacken's corps is the backbone of the Russian army, made up as it is of 10 divisions or 60 battalions. Bllicher is cut off from Sacken: he has two divisions with him.

llth, near Montmirail:

My brother, it is eight o'clock and before turning in I send you these two lines to inform you that to-day's work has been decisive. The enemy's army of Silesia no longer exists; I have completely routed it. We have captured all its guns and baggage and taken thousands of prisoners, perhaps 7000; they are coming in every minute. There are 5000 or 6000 of the enemy left on the
